

At Lovelace Rehabilitation Hospital, we help each person overcome the effects of disease or injury. If you or your family member has had surgery, an injury, or illness, our comprehensive inpatient rehabilitation program can help you recover more quickly and allow you to return to useful and productive activities. Illness or injury can cause temporary or even more serious permanent problems. Our services help you regain and maintain as much independence as possible. Each treatment program varies greatly depending upon your needs, but each is intensive and coordinated to help you return to your former lifestyle. We would like to talk with you about programs that will help meet your goals. Families and friends are a significant part of your treatment team. Family is often the most important factor in determining a patient's future quality of life. Your family is not only encouraged, but expected to actively participate in your treatment program.

Even before you are admitted, our medical professionals will work with you, your doctor, and your family members to identify your needs. The result is an individually designed treatment program that matches the level of care you require. If our inpatient program best meets your needs, the first step will be an evaluation with our multi-disciplinary team of specialists. A physiatrist, a physician specializing in physical medicine and rehabilitation, leads this team. You will learn about equipment that may help you become more independent and about community resources that can help you achieve a more independent lifestyle. Your individual program will include care from the following healthcare specialists:

- Physiatrists
- Rehabilitation nurses
- Physical therapists
- Occupational therapists
- Care coordinators
- Speech-language pathologists
